AN INTRODUCTION TO UNITED NATIONS SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT GOALS 2 (UN-SDG 2): ZERO HUNGER

- *DR. PRIYANKA KHANNA KAUSHIK

Introduction

Goal 2 of the 2030 Sustainable Development Agenda seeks to end hunger and all forms of malnutrition and double agricultural productivity in the next 10 years. Ensuring this sustainable access to nutritious food universally will require sustainable food production and agricultural practices. This goal is of prime importance as extreme hunger and malnutrition remains a barrier to sustainable development and creates a trap from which people cannot easily escape.

Hunger and malnutrition mean less productive individuals, who are more prone to disease and have poor health and thus often are unable to earn more and improve their livelihoods. Hunger can be viewed as a dimension of extreme poverty. It is often called the most severe and critical manifestation of poverty.

Background

According to the 2018 Global Hunger Index, despite the global hunger levels falling, one in nine people worldwide go hungry. Of the 690 million people suffering from chronic hunger globally, 98 per cent live in the developing world. World Hunger is still a major problem and a global issue. The main cause of hunger worldwide is poverty. Millions of people around the world are unable to buy food as they also lack resources like arable land and means to grow their own food, process, and store foodstuff. In order to address these risks, the Food and Agriculture Organization urges countries to:

- meet the immediate food needs of their vulnerable populations,
- boost social protection programmes,
- keep global food trade going,
- keep the domestic supply chain gears moving and
- support smallholder farmers' ability to increase food production.

The Aid and International Development Forum adopted the UN's SDGs and highlight that 650 million people worldwide will remain hungry by 2030 and malnutrition will continue to be a huge burden on the poorest countries if we continue on this trajectory path. The forum had consulted leading nutritionists on what needs to be done to achieve the goal by 2030. This is what the experts say, that if dietary diversity is too expensive, the cheapest and most effective way would be food fortification. They further highlight the micronutrient deficiencies, what is often called "hidden hunger". This deficiency then leads to global disease.

Collective and individual efforts at the local, national and international levels are necessary. This is where the role of Civil Society Organizations, Non-Governmental Organizations, International and National Agencies, and Donor Organizations comes into play.

Such agencies have the capabilities to deliver food fortification programmes at a large scale and have proved successful in reducing the deficiency rate. Also, a broad involvement of other stakeholders, such as the private sector, corporate houses and the general public will be required at large to accomplish this goal. The role of Civil Society Organizations is essential to advocate and campaign for targeted strategies and to monitor progress, as well as to innovate and promote alternative solutions. Now is the time to concretize the role of Civil Society Organizations vis-à-vis the States and other development partners and to identify avenues for action towards realizing Sustainable Development Goal 2 (SDG 2): End hunger, achieve food security and improved nutrition and promote sustainable agriculture. Also, Civil Society Organizations, Governmental Agencies, and the Private Sector including Corporate Houses need to create sound partnerships to share and learn and develop adequate policies.

Nutrition, Health, and WASH

The SDGs bear the opportunity for civil society to engage in the formulation of nutrition-sensitive policies and plans and to translate them into action. Sound policies have to take in account that SDG targets may provoke trade-offs, e.g. production vs. ecosystems. The promotion of a multi-sector engagement with a focus on nutrition will be crucial. More investment as well as regional networking and cross-learning are major driving factors to success. Northern Governments and international corporates should not influence food sovereignty in the South.

Agriculture and Employment

There is a disproportionate growth in the service sector that is creating a new wave of joblessness for a vast majority of unskilled youth. This, coupled with the deepening agrarian crisis across Asia, needs an innovative response: One that creates jobs within the agriculture sector, that is centered around better terms of trade and sustainability.

Agricultural development has to factor questions of crop diversity and the equitable distribution of land and water. Due to the increasing outmigration of men, access and control over land and other natural resources by women is critical. There is a need to create urban jobs in the primary and secondary sectors to absorb hundreds of millions of rural migrants. Job creation needs to happen in the formal sector with social protection measures for all labor – including the agricultural sector.

Social Protection and Inclusion

Social protection is a fundamental part of the SDGs and at the same time decisive for the fulfillment of the Right to Food. In countries with social security systems: (i) civil society should advocate to maintain social security systems and (ii) for transparent and accountable systems.

In countries with insufficient social security systems, we should advocate for legal enforcement of social security systems. Civil society should engage in the formulation and implementation of minimum standards to guarantee social security and inclusion.

Mobile Technology

Apart from these programmes, there are great possibilities for mobile technology for nutrition (mNutriton) or the use of mobile education tools, especially in education and changing behaviors. Initiatives like StartSmart focused on Maternal and child health care, where they draw up stakeholders to develop mobile nutrition services. Other initiatives are where organizations provide for nutrition advice for a child's first thousand days including the period just prior to pregnancy. Therefore, more can be achieved if malnutrition as a root cause of disease and deprivation is acknowledged.

Conclusion

The signs of increasing hunger and food insecurity are a warning that there is considerable work to be done to make sure the world "leaves no one behind" on the road towards a world with zero hunger. In short, if the underlying malnutrition issues are prioritized, SDG 2 would indeed be within our reach.
